Further heavy and persistent rainfall is expected on Saturday, the focus shifting subtly northwards, with further flooding possible.

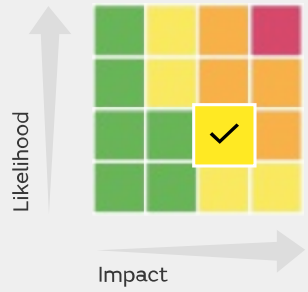
What to expect

- Homes and businesses could be flooded, causing damage to some buildings
- There is a chance of power cuts and loss of other services to some homes and businesses
- Delays or cancellations to train and bus services are possible
- Some communities may be cut off by flooded roads
- Fast flowing or deep floodwater is possible, causing a danger to life

Further details

The zone of heavy rain is expected to extend slowly northwards on Saturday, with the focus of heaviest rainfall remaining in parts of Wales but also moving into parts of Scotland, particularly Dumfries and Galloway and the Southwest Borders. Areas of high ground exposed to the south and south west will be most affected, with the potential for a further 50-80 mm quite widely.

The rain will be accompanied by strong winds, bringing down leaves and increasing the likelihood of flooding due to blocked drains or culverts.



Low likelihood of medium impacts
